The prosecutor was sure he had a clear-cut case and that he would have no trouble getting a conviction. What really did concern him, however, was the chance that he might not be able to catch the train in time to return to town, which would mean spending the night in this miserable, stinking little village.

The men on the jury had begun to dislike the prosecutor. They resented his arrogance and the way heshowed how he detested the people of the village, especially the miners, and they had seen how much he hated to have been ordered to a place where he could not walk half a block without losing his shoes in the much Because they wanted to see the overbearing prosecutor miss his train and go home defeated by the men he despised, the jurnes instated on their right to question both defendant and witnesses. If they thought it was necessary in order to clear up the case for their understanding. If Natalio himself should benefit by this procedure, to much the better. The men on the jury were much impressed by Natalio because he was calm and stoic.

The judge welcomed these unusual interruptions by the gentlemen of the jury. He had to stay overnight anyway, because he had several other cases to attend to. These interruptions made the trial less dull for him and shortened his day. He was thankful for this, because Natablo's was the only case for the day, and he had Natablo's was the only case for the day, and he had shortened to the control of the control of the had already slept so much here that he was titted of it.

One of the jurors asked the judge to please ask the defendant if it was true that he had confessed to the murder.

Natalio rose clumsily. "I don't know, senor," he said. He sat down again and replaced his cigarette between his line.

Another juror asked to see the written statement of Natalio's conféssion.

The processor jumped to his feet. "This attention," is within and signed by the police officer, which was necessary because the defendant on the wide was necessary because the defendant on the processor of the case. and his honorable colleagues should be obliged to believe more in the word of a policeman, who received his salary from the taxpayer's money, than in the word of an honest and sober miner like Natalio, who did not live, and never had lived, on the money of the taxpaying citizens. He said it was well known that Natalio worked hard for his living and that he produced valuable goods for the benefit of the whole nation.

Still another juror asked the defendant to confess right then and there, in the very face of the jury, that he had committed the crime he was charged with.

The judge called Natalio. "You heard what the honorable gentleman of the jury wishes to know. Did you kill the Crespo woman?"

Natalio rose only halfway. "I don't know, senor," he said quietly.

The prosecutor jumped to his feet, "But you did throw the bomb, didn't you, Natalio?" he demanded. "Tell us the truth, my man! Lying won't help you. You did throw the hombi!"

With a bored note in his voice, Natalio said, "I don't know nothing." He sat down again and puffed away at his cigarette with signs of an undisturbed conscience.

The processor did not call the policeman, as he had said he was given to 0.18 It have by would ask the policeman if it was not true that he reviewd his salary to make the policeman if it was not true that he reviewd his salary from the taxes said by the chitzen. Because he foresaw such a laymark distortion of the facts, the prosecuted redicied against caling the policeman to the stand. Instead, he called Filomena, together with the others who were present in the bat when the bomb was thrown. Filomena and the other witnesses knew perfectly well what the whole community knew; that is, that nobody else but Natalio had been the maker and thrower of the bomb. Natalio had left no one in the village with any doubt as to who it was that knew how to defend his honor and how to runkis an unfaithful us.

THE HANGOV FACTS FIGURES

IT WAS THE END OF the world, I knew it the moment I opened a bloodshot eye. My head felt as though a herd of water buffalo were stampeding across my frontal lobes and even the dim light that filtered through the shuttered window exploded in my one open eye with all the power of a battery of kleig lights.

You guessed it. I had laid one on the night before and I was now paying the price—and what a price it was!

As I stumbled out of bed and practically choked on my hairy tongue, I swore: "Never again!" But even as I swore, some half-snicketing aspect of me whispered way down deep: "Well, not until the next time, pered way down deep: "Well, not until the next time, anyway."

There and then, in the midst of my misery, I realized that something had to be done. There were two alternatives before me.

1. Take the oath.

Discover a way to really cure and/or prevent hangover.

The first alternative, I quickly realized, in spite of my terrible affliction, was a frastile measure unwelly of a healthy, red-blodedd young American male. The second alternative was by far the more promising. Surely, science, that has unlocked the secrets of the anoman of traced the contours of the galactics, thust have discovered some sure way to deal with the 'morning after.'

So, with courges in my heart and throbbing head held high, I laurheed a project that would not only benefit me, but sould prove a boon to every poor, miscrable slob who ever knew the pangs that struck in the morning. With scientific ardour, I set myself the task of ferreting out a surefire way to handle HANGOVER.

My first step of course, was a wist to my doctor. I had already tried all the garden-scapier of curseeverything from Prainie Oysters to you're—see a few according to the condition of the cond enough, the voodoo method worked. Two days later I felt fine. But those intervening days, they were murder.

My doctor, dedicated soul that he is, explained the physics of the hangover, It is all very simple, he told me in judicious scientific phraseology. The basic cause of the hangover is lack of oxygen in the brain. Alcohol acts like an anesthetic; if it isn't burned up quickly enough, it prevents oxygen from reaching your brain cells. Right here is the source of all the trouble.

The result of this oxygen starvation was aptly described some 25 centuries ago in India; "owniting, loss of appetite, heartburn, lassitude, continued thirst, tremors of head and limbs, palpitation, weakness of joints, thick topue, respiration difficulty, sleeplessness, giddiness, and a feeling as though one were wrapped in a wift sheet."

Alcohol, the good doctor went on to explain, is really not the calprit. The body can pretty well manage alcohol, bud it can't take care of the impurities in liquor. It is these impurities, called fusel oils, that keep liquor. It is these impurities, called fusel oils, that keep the body from burning up the alcohol quickly enough. AHA! Here was an interesting discovery. Fusel oils were the dastardly-figo-dients that were at the source of my miseries.

Ouickly, like a hound that's got the scent in his nose, I hied over to a chemist acquaintance of mine. He would be able to explain the existence of these terrible fusels. And he did.

The fermestation process, he explained to me, really ferments. When alcohol is being distilled, some 100 to 200 imputities are formed along with the ethyl alcohol—pool, innocent spirit. Now, these fused loss how a look now as congeners—smell terrible and taster worse. The reason why we don't know this right the best of the best of the pool of the pool

I also learned from my chemist friend that some liquors have more fusel oils than others. Bonded bourbon has the most. In fact, the older and more expensive the whiskey you drink, the more fusel oils you are getting. (confined on page 49)
